GLEANINGS March 2018

Are you taking steps to avoid losing any of your collection to thieves? I recently learned that a fellow collector was the victim of a burglary when he was not at home. In other cases, someone with permission to be in the home stole coins and other valuables.

While not exhaustive, I found some suggestions at lincolncentresource.com, which are paraphrased here:

1. Keep your coins in a safe deposit box, but this means that you will have limited access to them.
2. Keeping your coins in a safe makes it less likely they will be stolen by visitors to your home. A fire safe adds some protection if there is a fire in your home.
3. Hide your coins in an unlikely place or in something like a slide projector carousel that does not look like it stores coins. However, a friend stored his collection in his attic and an acquaintance staying in his home a few weeks located and stole his collection.
4. Keep accurate records of all your coins, including serial numbers of any certified coins. This may help identify and recover your coins if they are found.
5. You can buy coin insurance, but it can be complicated and you are unlikely to get full value in the event of a theft.

Amac.com recommendations include: Put it in a safe place; Keep your mouth shut about where it is; Don't announce when you will be out of town.

A home security service can act as a deterrent, especially when you display the company's sign at your home. Also, are you careful about when, where, and with whom you discuss your collection?

Coin dealers are encouraged to be particularly careful when returning from a coin show. Thieves have been known to follow a dealer from the show to their home. They might try to intercept the dealer when they stop at a restaurant or when they get home. Or, they might just note the location and break in later when the homeowner is not home. This could apply to someone else leaving a coin show with a valuable purchase.

Ultimately, not all crime and loss can be avoided, but situational awareness and some intentional safety measures can protect you and your collection. Stay safe.
